Indian Night at the Conference.

Monday evening was observed as In-dian night at the Home Missionary conference now in session. A large crowd gathered at the Auditorium to hear Dr. Charles Eastman, a full-blooded Dakota Indian. He is a graduate of Dartmouth college and of the medical department of Boston university and has worked among his people. The past three years he has traveled in the United States and lectured. With him was his beautiful daughter, Miss Irene Eastman. Both were in the full costume of an Indian chief and Indian maiden. Dr. Eastman made a pathetic and strong appeal for the "children of nature." He strongly protested against the put-ting of the Indian children at five years of age in government schools, away from the influence of their mothers. He showed the beautiful side of the good Indian mother.

Miss Eastman gave many selections of Indian folk songs which had been transcribed and harmonized by American composers. She has a wonderfully sweet voice of wide range and was warmly received. Mrs. Charles Eastman is known as Elaine Goodell, the poet of the Berkshires.

MEAT PRODUCTION.

There has been considerable eareless Increasing but Not Keeping Pace with Growth in Population.

> That meat production has not kept pace with the increase in population and that its failure to do so, combined with increased cost of production and liminished purchasing power of money unit, has contributed to prices, not only in the United States but all over the world, is stated in Part I of the exhaustive report on th meat situation in the preparation of which specialists of the department have been engaged for some time. This country, it is said, is participating it a world-wide movement, and it is not expected that the situation will under go any radical change in the immediate future. On the other hand, it is be lieved that there will be a gradual growth and expansion in the world production of beef, mutton, and pork which may or may not equal the rate of increase of the meat-cating popula

In America this gradual expansion appears to have begun already. Be-tween 1907 and 1913 there was a marked decline in the number of cattle in the country, but in the last two years this not only has stopped but has given way to a perceptible increase. The estimated number on farms and ranges on January 1, 1916, 61,441,000. is, however, still much below the cor-responding figures for 1907, 72,534,000. With the exception of temporary checks due to losses from hog cholers, there has been in recent years a per sistent increase in the production of swine. On January 1, 1916, the number in the country was estimated at 68,000,000, as compared with 58,200,000 in April, 1910. On the other hand, the number of sheep declined during this period from 52,500,000 in 1910 to 49,200,000 in 1916. As the decrease, however, is not sufficient to offset the in crease in cattle and swine, it may be said that the total production of meat n the United States is increasing, but that this increase is not yet proportionate to the growth in population.

The available supply of ment would be much greater if it were not for the enormous losses caused by disease and exposure. Since 1900 it is estimated that from 1,100,000 to 1,475,000 eattle have died each year from disease and from 600,000 to 1,500,000 from exposure. With sheep, the losses from disease have been about the same, but from exposure much larger. With swine the relative prevalence of hog colera the annual loss. In 1894 this was as low as 2,200,000, but in 1914 it amounted to 7,000,000. If these 7,000,000 and New Zealand.
